

Title: Vector Databases for Semantic Search

Vector databases store numerical embeddings instead of raw text. These embeddings capture semantic meaning, enabling similarity search. They are widely used in semantic search and Retrieval-Augmented Generation (RAG) pipelines because they can efficiently find contextually similar documents even when exact keywords do not match.